LESSON 01 / 05

Choose the user before the product

Choose a use case before collecting products. Start with something you own, can demonstrate, and know well enough to describe both strengths and drawbacks. Price and popularity alone don’t tell you whom a review will help. Write down the conditions in which you used the product; your experience may not generalize to everyone.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> “Does this fit a car cup holder?” and “Does this keep a drink warm at home?” are different reviews of the same cup. Pick one for the first video.

YOUR TURN

List three products you own. Compare firsthand experience, filmable evidence, and limitations you can explain. Choose one.

LESSON 02 / 05

Film evidence for an honest review

02

Honest review

Evidence beats adjectives. Show size, setup, and conditions, and describe only what you experienced. For comparisons, keep the angle and usage conditions as similar as possible. If you haven’t tried an alternative, don’t declare your product superior. Name the boundaries of the review so viewers know what the video does and does not establish.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Instead of “the perfect stand,” show how it holds your phone with its case and demonstrate any movement.

YOUR TURN

Film the whole product, hands-on use, a drawback, and the result. Separate observable facts from your opinion for each scene.

LESSON 03 / 05

One product, three distinct questions

Don’t repeat the same video with a different title. Answer distinct buying questions: fit, everyday use, and situations where the product is unsuitable. You can reuse relevant source footage, but each episode needs its own explanation and conclusion. In EasyCut, choose a highlight for that episode’s question rather than accepting the same attractive moment every time.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Episode 1: footprint on a small desk. Episode 2: folding and setup. Episode 3: situations where you would choose something else.

YOUR TURN

For each episode, note the question __, evidence __, source section __, and distinct conclusion __ before choosing an EasyCut draft.

LESSON 04 / 05

Walk through the buying journey

04

Next step

Interested viewers still need a usable path. URLs in Shorts descriptions and comments aren’t clickable; point to a clickable location such as your channel profile, then test it on a phone. Check your affiliate program’s disclosure, payment, and usage terms. Choose a program available to you rather than assuming one country’s example applies everywhere.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Check that the destination matches the product and variant named in the video. Availability and options can change after publication.

YOUR TURN

Follow video → link location → product page on your phone. Fix confusing steps and remove claims the destination cannot support.

LESSON 05 / 05

Separate attention from orders

01	>	02	>	03
Experience		Honest review		Next step

Views, link visits, and orders describe different stages. If viewers don’t move on, inspect the fit between the content and product and the clarity of the next step. If visits don’t become orders, review suitability, price, and conditions. Check the program’s rules for cancellations and returns before treating an order as final income.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Before changing every caption to increase clicks, ask whether the problem you solved actually calls for the product you linked.

YOUR TURN

Record topic, views, questions, link visits, and orders separately. Choose one stage to improve in the next video.

EASYCUT / FROM SOURCE TO SHORT

Make it with EasyCut

1

Choose footage and a message

Mark a complete question-and-answer section in your footage. Prepare an authorized YouTube source link and write the message in one line.

2

Make a draft in EasyCut

Add your source, check the creation settings, and generate highlights. Choose one that fully answers the question, then edit the title and captions in your own voice.

3

Review and publish yourself

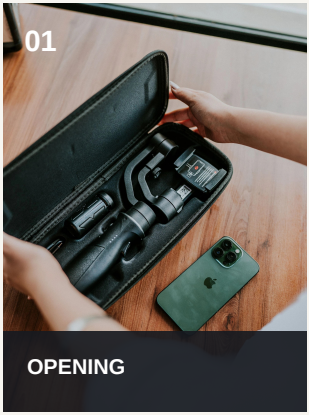

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

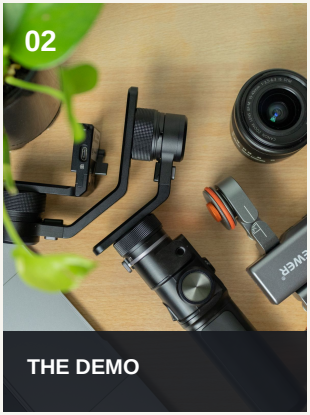

Inputs and features may vary by account and screen. Check support for uploading or scheduling instead of assuming it is automatic.

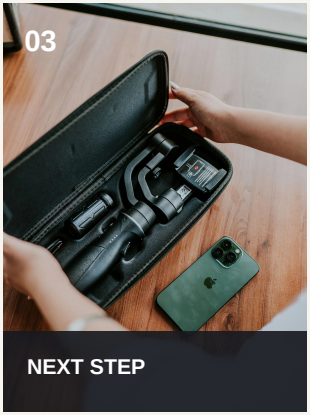

STORYBOARD / A WORKING DRAFT

Think in three scenes

A practice storyboard. Photos suggest a visual approach; adapt the scenes to your own experience and footage.

OPENING	Check the size before you buy
THE DEMO	Show your own measurements alongside the product in use. Close-up demo → before/after under the same conditions → caption the result
NEXT STEP	Explain who it suits, then point to the buying information you checked.

YOUR PACE / YOUR PLAN

Find your own rhythm

Start with a schedule you can finish. These are ways to divide the work, not promises about how many videos you will produce.

Under 30 minutes a day

Day 1

Pick one idea

Write down one viewer and one thing you want to tell them.

Days 2-3

Prepare your footage

Film the scenes you need or choose clips from your own videos.

Days 4-5

Edit your first Short

Work on the structure one day and check captions the next.

Days 6-7

Publish and reflect

Publish when you can, then note one thing to change next time.

Weekend sessions

Beforehand

Collect your ideas

When you have a spare moment, jot down questions and scenes to film.

Saturday

Prepare your footage

Choose your own clips or film the scenes you need in one session.

Sunday

Edit and check

Check captions and context, then get your videos ready to publish.

Next week

Publish and check the response

Publish when you can, or use YouTube’s scheduling feature.

Time your own work, then adjust next week’s plan.

WORKSHEET / MAKE IT YOURS

Notes for your next Short

Turn the ideas into your own video. Save or print this page and fill it in as you make each Short.

1 Whose question will you answer?

2 Your evidence and source footage

3 Your opening and closing lines

4 Time: filming / editing / review

5 Questions and responses observed

6 One change and a review date

FIELD QUESTIONS / REAL NEXT STEPS

A little help when stuck

Q1 Can I use the AI-selected clip as it is?

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

Q2 Do I need to post daily with my schedule?

Today, finish only the opening and scene selection. Edit in EasyCut next session and review separately. You don’t need a daily upload target.

Q3 How can I stand out without showing my face?

Show firsthand evidence: conditions, failed attempts, and why you chose a method. Add your own explanation and edit out repetition.

Q4 What should I change when response is weak?

Time topic selection, filming, EasyCut editing, and review separately. Batch similar scenes and keep one caption style for your first video.
