YOUR WORKING TOOLS

08 Workflow / 09 Scenes / 10 Pace / 11 Notes / 12 FAQ

LESSON 01 / 05

Describe your audience to a brand

A brand needs to understand whether your audience fits its customers. Describe viewers using evidence you actually have: recurring questions, content interests, or available analytics. Don’t invent age, income, or buying power. A clear small audience description is more useful than a large unsupported claim. Explain the problem your videos repeatedly help people solve.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> “People exercising in small spaces ask about setup and storage” is more useful than “a channel for everyone.”

YOUR TURN

Topic __ / three real repeated questions __ / verified audience information __ / what you don’t know __.

LESSON 02 / 05

Create a sample without a sponsor

02

Sample video

A sample demonstrates your production approach; it should not pretend to be a real sponsorship. Use something you already know and build a problem, demonstration, and qualified conclusion. Clearly label practice work as a sample in your portfolio. Use EasyCut to make an initial highlight, then check product names, claims, and what the final framing shows.

TRY THIS APPROACH

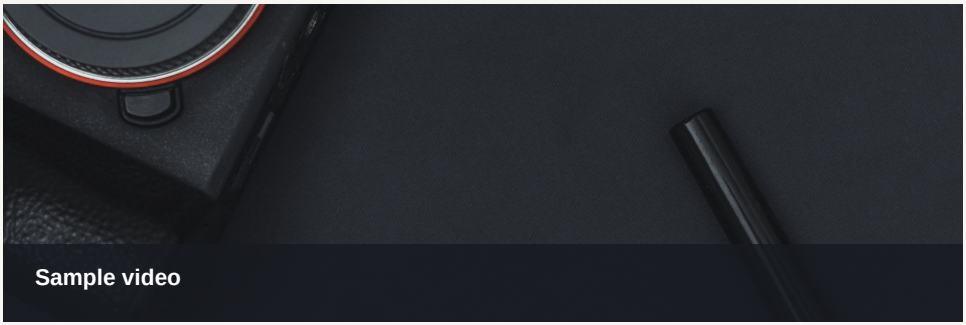

> Let one sample demonstrate use and another address a viewer's concern. Give them different jobs, even if they feature the same product.

YOUR TURN

Sample purpose __ / evidence __ / supported benefit __ / limitation to include __.

LESSON 03 / 05

A one-page channel overview

Keep the media kit to a clear first page: topic, audience, representative links, available formats, and a contact method. Put dates and measurement windows beside performance figures. Don’t present your single best result as typical. Remove personal viewer information from examples and screenshots. A reviewer should understand your fit without opening a long presentation.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> For an average view count, state the period and number of videos. With little data, focus on representative work and a concrete production plan.

YOUR TURN

Create one page with a one-line introduction, audience evidence, two sample links, deliverable formats, and a contact method.

LESSON 04 / 05

Your first pitch and scope

04

A clear pitch

Explain the fit before making a request. Send a concise idea and sample link, then discuss scope rather than promising unlimited revisions or unrestricted reuse. Separate production payment, product provision, posting locations, deadlines, revisions, and advertising reuse. This is a planning checklist, not a substitute for reviewing the actual agreement or local disclosure requirements.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> “I make videos about storage in small spaces. I’d like to demonstrate your product before and after installation. Here’s a relevant sample: __.” Then invite a discussion about scope.

YOUR TURN

Brand __ / reason for fit __ / proposed deliverable __ / usage rights to discuss __ / follow-up date __.

LESSON 05 / 05

Report back and improve the next deal

01 Audience > 02 Sample video > 03 A clear pitch

Report the agreed deliverables, live links, and metrics you can verify. If you cannot access purchase data, don’t claim that your video caused sales. Include recurring questions and one improvement for a future collaboration. Note the reporting date because performance changes over time. Keep the source material and approvals organized according to the agreement.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Observation: many comments asked about fit. Proposal: add a size comparison next time. Keep the two clearly separated.

YOUR TURN

Published link __ / measurement period __ / verified results __ / unknown results __ / next proposal __.

EASYCUT / FROM SOURCE TO SHORT

Make it with EasyCut

1

Choose footage and a message

Mark a complete question-and-answer section in your footage. Prepare an authorized YouTube source link and write the message in one line.

2

Make a draft in EasyCut

Add your source, check the creation settings, and generate highlights. Choose one that fully answers the question, then edit the title and captions in your own voice.

3

Review and publish yourself

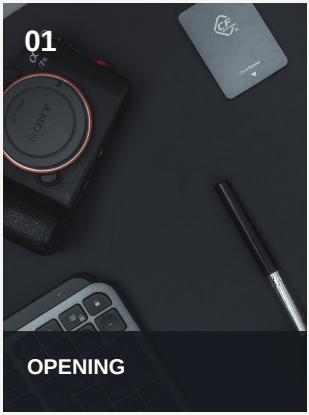

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

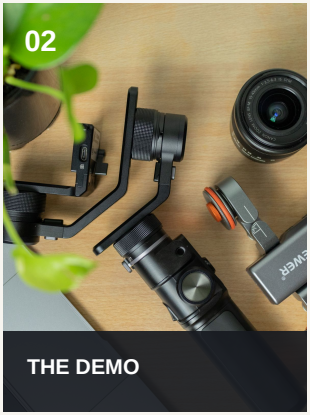

Inputs and features may vary by account and screen. Check support for uploading or scheduling instead of assuming it is automatic.

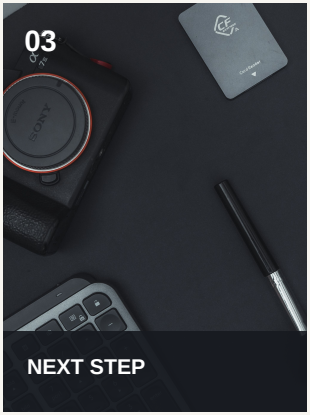

STORYBOARD / A WORKING DRAFT

Think in three scenes

A practice storyboard. Photos suggest a visual approach; adapt the scenes to your own experience and footage.

OPENING	A tip I discovered by actually using it
THE DEMO	Explain how you used it and what it felt like for you. Close-up demo → before/after under the same conditions → caption the result
NEXT STEP	Invite viewers to leave one question they'd like you to answer next.

SHOT NOTES: source / in & out points / words to verify

YOUR PACE / YOUR PLAN

Find your own rhythm

Start with a schedule you can finish. These are ways to divide the work, not promises about how many videos you will produce.

Under 30 minutes a day

Day 1

Pick one idea

Write down one viewer and one thing you want to tell them.

Days 2-3

Prepare your footage

Film the scenes you need or choose clips from your own videos.

Days 4-5

Edit your first Short

Work on the structure one day and check captions the next.

Days 6-7

Publish and reflect

Publish when you can, then note one thing to change next time.

Time your own work, then adjust next week's plan.

Your first brand collaboration

Weekend sessions

Beforehand

Collect your ideas

When you have a spare moment, jot down questions and scenes to film.

Saturday

Prepare your footage

Choose your own clips or film the scenes you need in one session.

Sunday

Edit and check

Check captions and context, then get your videos ready to publish.

Next week

Publish and check the response

Publish when you can, or use YouTube's scheduling feature.

WORKSHEET / MAKE IT YOURS

Notes for your next Short

Turn the ideas into your own video. Save or print this page and fill it in as you make each Short.

1 Whose question will you answer?

2 Your evidence and source footage

3 Your opening and closing lines

4 Time: filming / editing / review

5 Questions and responses observed

6 One change and a review date

FIELD QUESTIONS / REAL NEXT STEPS

A little help when stuck

Q1 Can I use the AI-selected clip as it is?

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

Q2 Do I need to post daily with my schedule?

Today, finish only the opening and scene selection. Edit in EasyCut next session and review separately. You don’t need a daily upload target.

Q3 How can I stand out without showing my face?

Show firsthand evidence: conditions, failed attempts, and why you chose a method. Add your own explanation and edit out repetition.

Q4 What should I change when response is weak?

Time topic selection, filming, EasyCut editing, and review separately. Batch similar scenes and keep one caption style for your first video.
