WHAT YOU WILL MAKE

Outline three episodes and a review routine

One page. One practical next step.

FIVE PRACTICAL LESSONS

03	Turn a broad topic into repeatable questions
04	A reason to watch the next episode
05	Find complete stories in long footage
06	Change one thing at a time
07	Before applying for ad revenue

Build a channel people return to

LESSON 01 / 05

Turn a broad topic into repeatable questions

“Gaming” or “studying” is a field, not a filmable episode. Add the viewer’s level and situation: how a new player gets through one section, or how a student checks one type of mistake. A precise question makes source selection easier and the title more honest. Keep a list of adjacent questions, but give each its own episode.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Instead of “get better at the game,” try “the sound to listen for in this section.” Show the cue and the result in your own gameplay.

YOUR TURN

Viewer level __ / sticking point __ / process to demonstrate __ / next related question __.

LESSON 02 / 05

A reason to watch the next episode

02

New question

A repeated title does not make a series. Each episode should answer its own question, while the next explores a related one. Don’t withhold the promised answer merely to force another view. Deliver a complete useful moment, then mention the next problem a viewer may run into. Use consistent naming to make the connection recognizable.

TRY THIS APPROACH

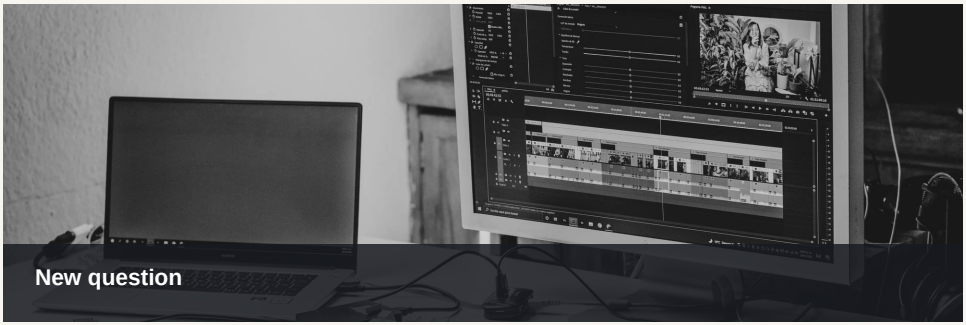

> Episode 1: the basic move. Episode 2: a common mistake. Episode 3: when the method won’t work. Related, but independently useful.

YOUR TURN

Write a separate question and conclusion for three episodes. If the conclusions are identical, reconsider whether you are repeating the same video.

LESSON 03 / 05

Find complete stories in long footage

The most dramatic sentence in a long video may not make a good Short. A new viewer needs to know the subject, follow the explanation, and understand the result. When reviewing EasyCut's candidates, score both interest and accuracy without extra context. A calmer complete answer can be more useful than a striking statement that loses its qualification.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> In an interview, don't clip only "that method doesn't work." Keep the condition and the reason it fails.

YOUR TURN

Compare three candidates for a clear subject, reason, and result. Edit a complete candidate first.

LESSON 04 / 05

Change one thing at a time

04

Next episode

Start with a hypothesis: unclear opening, repeated explanation, or a mismatch between title and content. Change only one factor in the next video so you can learn from the comparison. Similar topics, lengths, and observation periods make the comparison more useful. Small short-term differences can be noise; look for patterns across several attempts.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Hypothesis: the result arrives too late. Change: open the next related video with the finished result. Keep explanation style and approximate length similar.

YOUR TURN

Hypothesis __ / one change __ / what stays consistent __ / metric __ / comparison time __.

LESSON 05 / 05

Before applying for ad revenue

01 Same viewer > 02 New question > 03 Next episode

Ad revenue isn’t automatically approved when views rise. Check your channel’s current requirements and application status in YouTube Studio. Permission to edit footage and monetization approval are separate questions. Even with permission, identify the original explanation or value your channel adds. Revisit the official policy links before applying instead of relying on an old screenshot of thresholds.

TRY THIS APPROACH

> Record when you checked the official requirements. Another creator’s approval does not establish what will happen to your channel.

YOUR TURN

Original contribution __ / source rights __ / date requirements were checked __ / work needed before applying __.

EASYCUT / FROM SOURCE TO SHORT

Make it with EasyCut

1

Choose footage and a message

Mark a complete question-and-answer section in your footage. Prepare an authorized YouTube source link and write the message in one line.

2

Make a draft in EasyCut

Add your source, check the creation settings, and generate highlights. Choose one that fully answers the question, then edit the title and captions in your own voice.

3

Review and publish yourself

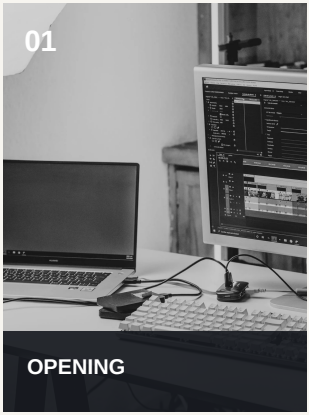

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

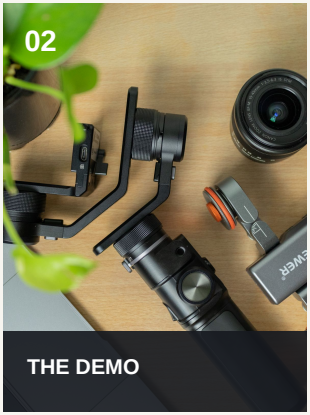

Inputs and features may vary by account and screen. Check support for uploading or scheduling instead of assuming it is automatic.

STORYBOARD / A WORKING DRAFT

Think in three scenes

A practice storyboard. Photos suggest a visual approach; adapt the scenes to your own experience and footage.

OPENING	Why this part was so tricky
THE DEMO	Use your own gameplay to show both the goal and the outcome. Close-up demo → before/after under the same conditions → caption the result
NEXT STEP	Invite viewers to leave one question they'd like you to answer next.

SHOT NOTES: source / in & out points / words to verify

YOUR PACE / YOUR PLAN

Find your own rhythm

Start with a schedule you can finish. These are ways to divide the work, not promises about how many videos you will produce.

Under 30 minutes a day

Day 1

Pick one idea

Write down one viewer and one thing you want to tell them.

Days 2-3

Prepare your footage

Film the scenes you need or choose clips from your own videos.

Days 4-5

Edit your first Short

Work on the structure one day and check captions the next.

Days 6-7

Publish and reflect

Publish when you can, then note one thing to change next time.

Weekend sessions

Beforehand

Collect your ideas

When you have a spare moment, jot down questions and scenes to film.

Saturday

Prepare your footage

Choose your own clips or film the scenes you need in one session.

Sunday

Edit and check

Check captions and context, then get your videos ready to publish.

Next week

Publish and check the response

Publish when you can, or use YouTube’s scheduling feature.

Time your own work, then adjust next week’s plan.

WORKSHEET / MAKE IT YOURS

Notes for your next Short

Turn the ideas into your own video. Save or print this page and fill it in as you make each Short.

1 Whose question will you answer?

2 Your evidence and source footage

3 Your opening and closing lines

4 Time: filming / editing / review

5 Questions and responses observed

6 One change and a review date

FIELD QUESTIONS / REAL NEXT STEPS

A little help when stuck

Q1 Can I use the AI-selected clip as it is?

Check numbers, names, and context against the source. Preview text and framing on a phone, download the finished video, publish it, and record the metrics below.

Q2 Do I need to post daily with my schedule?

Today, finish only the opening and scene selection. Edit in EasyCut next session and review separately. You don’t need a daily upload target.

Q3 How can I stand out without showing my face?

Show firsthand evidence: conditions, failed attempts, and why you chose a method. Add your own explanation and edit out repetition.

Q4 What should I change when response is weak?

Time topic selection, filming, EasyCut editing, and review separately. Batch similar scenes and keep one caption style for your first video.
